

The frosted glass door above the bar is equipped with a hydraulic lift for easy opening. Tucked inside is Dinner's favorite kitchen staple: cereal.

(above) A cozy bar with Holly Hunt stools makes this small kitchen more functional. (lower right) Dinner built her color palette around the green and white fabric window coverings by Zimmer+Rhode. "I was struggling with the other colors," she says. But once Dinner decided on the red lacquer cabinets, she was thrilled. "It was a little bit of a crazy combination, but I think it works."

PHOTOGRAPHY BY EMILY MINTON-REDFIELD

When designer Kristi Dinner had the opportunity to purchase a home her grandparents had lived in during the 1920s, she jumped at the chance and quickly began a massive remodel. When Dinner finally tackled the kitchen, she created a colorful, whimsical space with custom elements. "This was a chance to do what I want without having to bow to a client," she says. The red lacquer cabinets are offset by green and white Ann Sacks tiles and apple-green walls. The custom glass built-in, with a modern take on the Greek key design, allows Dinner to show off her prized collection of glass and collectibles. "My grandparents would get a laugh out of the kitchen, but the goal was to make it my own." ▸
